Hunter Biden Investigated for Chinese Tax Link as Dad Considers Buttigieg for Ambassador

Among one of the many revelations we were privy to thanks to the New York Post's censored story not long ago on Hunter Biden, was the not talked about aspect of his dealings with China. Ukraine was the main story, as a way for Hunter to cash in on his father's name, but no one talked about his taxes or links to China.

> The allegations at the heart of this investigation compels an examination of a fascinating and at-times disturbing speech at a major financial event held last week in Shanghai. In that speech, a Chinese scholar of political science and international finance, Di Donghseng, insisted that Beijing will have far more influence in Washington under a Biden administration than it did with the Trump administration.

It is important to note that before the 2020 election, Hunter promised to step down from a Chinese-backed firm he was working for, if his father was elected. Thanks to Trump's precedent of not divesting yourself of personal financial holdings while in office, Hunter will probably be allowed to get away with his corruption. I mean, he was doing it when his dad was Vice-President; why not as President? Speaking of president, Obama defended Hunter back in 2008 when Hunter was getting money for no reason from a bank.

> Mr. Biden's son, Hunter, received consulting fees from the MBNA Corporation from 2001 to 2005 for work on online banking issues. Aides to Mr. Obama, who chose Mr. Biden as his vice-presidential running mate on Saturday, would not say how much the younger Mr. Biden, who works as both a lawyer and lobbyist in Washington, had received, though a company official had once described him as having a $100,000 a year retainer. But Obama aides said he had never lobbied for MBNA and that there was nothing improper about the payments.

Oh but have no fear, because what is obviously a conflict of interest is definitely not a conflict of interest.

> Campaign officials acknowledged that the connection between the Bidens and MBNA, the enormous financial services company then based in their home state of Delaware, was one of the most sensitive issues they examined while vetting the senator for a spot on the ticket.

On the bright side, Mayor Booty-Judge will be the ambassador to China under Biden, reportedly. Why do we still have ambassadors anyway? They only existed because it was difficult to liaison with other countries before phones, internet and air travel. But in an age of the internet, this is just a waste of tax payer money. My prediction on the investigation into Hunter Biden is that nothing will come of it, but it will give Fox News something to orgasm about, just like Benghazi.
